"The computer science major at Truman gives students the ability to learn about many different areas within computer science, all while pursuing a liberal arts degree. With smaller class sizes, I'm able to get to know my professors and classmates better, creating a closer community. I appreciate that professors are always willing to answer questions I have and make sure I succeed in their classes. Computer science students take classes over a variety of topics, such as programming, hardware, logic, and are able to choose from classes over many other different areas that may interest them. Professors are excited and interested in the topics that they are teaching, which makes classes more fun and engaging, and all of my professors know me by name."
